Rowland did it. He took players like Jacques Fournier and convinced them that they were Cobbs and Speakers. Day after day Clarence would glare straight into the face of Fournier and murmur over and over again: "Jakes, you certainly can bust that pill."

Then, while the spell held, Fournier would drive the ball to great distances. One of his hits yesterday lit in the flower bed in deep centre field. The marvel of Rowland's success is all the greater from the fact that he gets his effects without the whiskers which Wilton Lackage used Marty McHale, whose favorite noise is tenor singing, began the game, but he could not seem to get the proper pitch and retired in the second to make way for Ensign Cottrell. Ensign is the only lefthander on the staff of the Yankees. Judged by his work of yesterday afternoon, he has no other distinction. As Washington won the Yankees fell from the first division and are now in fifth place.

The Sox made eighteen hits and they were pretty fairly apportioned all the way down the line. Roth got a bit more than his share, for he gathered a home run, a triple and a single. He also stole a base and dre wa pass.

Polo Grounders saw Eddie Collins for the first time in a uniform other than that of the Athletics. The blue and white delivery of Comiskey becomes Eddie just about as well as the runs were scored on this combination.

With the score at 7 to 0 it might be well to draw a veil over the rest of the game. As fourteen hits were made against Cottrell in his seven and two-thirds innings, it was not hard for the Sox to add six more runs to their total.

The only other feature worthy of mention was a break in an envisible record held by Dan Boone. After going along since May 22 without an error Boone made two in the seventh finning on the same play. First he fumbled and allowed the batter to reach first. Then, to make matters worse, he threw badly and allowed the runner to go on to second.
